Their Handicap is Hunger

1 In a world where man is capable of reaching the moon, hunger is a scandal which causes a great deal of deaths among the poor of the Third World. It also leaves millions of others marked for life by severe physical and mental disabilities. For a large proportion of the millions of handicapped people in the world, the handicap is due to malnutrition.

2 One essential aspect of malnutrition as a cause of handicap is the effect it has on the brain of the infant, both before birth and in the early years of life. Mothers who have not taken protein and calories during pregnancy often give birth to babies of very low weight and very small brain. Recent medical research has shown that 50% of new-born children who weigh less than 1,5 kg suffer from mental deficiency. Malnutrition has similar effects during the first five years of life, the most important period for brain growth.

3 In 1974, the United Nations Food Conference estimated that 100,000 children go blind each year because of vitamin A deficiency. It stated that if we gave each child two capsules of vitamin A, the total annual cost of protecting 100 million children would be three million dollars. In other words with just three dollars we could save 100 children from the risk of blindness.
